Eloy Velazquez Cevallos, former Director of Education of the Province of Guayas, plans to establish a Celula Juvenil Comunista (Communist Youth Cell) in Guayaquil. This cell would take in members who, although maintaining certain religious principles, could at the same time accept the economic principles of Communism. Velazquez allegedly feels that the Ecuadorian Communist Party could enlist more members if it were known that membership did not depend on a complete adherence to the materialistic, scholastic, or anti-religious attitude of the Party.

25X1A6a

The proposed organization follows the pattern of Communist Party organizations. An appeal is made to individuals who may lean towards Communism, but are not yet ready to accept strictly Communist principles. This organization is an attempt by the Communist to appeal to those people who would adhere to Communist Party principles, except for their religious beliefs.
